

Suggested Interview Questions for Eugene Cho, author of *Thou Shalt Not Be A Jerk: A Christian's Guide to Engaging in Politics

Many Christians are not only passionate about politics but are also involved in politics on some level.

And yet, I would argue, at times we are played by politics.

At times, our identities and values become distorted and our hopes misplaced.

-- Eugene Cho

- You are not known for being overtly political, so why did you write Thou Shalt Not Be A Jerk?
 - Why should politics should matter to Christians?
 - How can listening be a part of the political process? How have you seen that play out in your own community?
 - Why do you say this question is so important: “Have you ever had conversations with people who have voted differently than you?”
 - Tell us about your idea to “Make Dinner Great Again.”
 - What exactly is the Kingdom of God, and how does it intersect with everyday life, including our politics?
- Let’s get specific – In what way should faith decisions manifest in legislation?
 - Does the Gospel exclude social justice or human dignity?
 - How can everyday people make a difference? (ie, One Day’s Wages)
 - What is the role of persecution in being a winsome, engaged Christian?
 - When talking about politics, it is tempting to be the loudest, angriest, the first to speak or the person to have final word. Why do we need to resist this urge?
 - What should Christians do about “fake news”?
 - How is advocacy spiritual work?
 - How do you believe Christians can engage in politics without fear?
-

GUEST: Eugene Cho, pastor, speaker, author, humanitarian

BOOK: Thou Shalt Not Be A Jerk: A Christian's Guide to Engaging in Politics

AVAILABLE: March 2020 from David C Cook

WEBSITE: www.EugeneCho.com
